I. Background and rationale

The first High-Level Meeting (HLM) of the Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation (GPEDC) concluded in Mexico City April 2014, with a strong call for strengthening the effectiveness of development co-operation to reach global and national development goals. The communique of the Mexico HLM: Building Towards an Inclusive Post-2015 Development Agenda, guided by the Busan Partnership agreement, signals the continuous engagement of the international community to sustain political momentum to ensure that commitments are implemented, building upon the shared principles, common goals and differential responsibilities. It also invites the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to “continue supporting its [Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation’s] effective functioning”.

The consultations after the first High-Level Meeting of the Global Partnership for Effective Development Co-operation have identified priority action for the upcoming agenda of the Partnership to maximize its contribution to deliver better development results. This includes (1) focusing on country implementation; (2) supporting mutual learning between different actors and partnership models; (3) supporting accountability for implementing commitments and ensuring that evidence of progress and challenges at country level is properly reflected in global discussions; and (4) strengthening the linkages with global processes and making a valuable contribution to the post-2015 development agenda by strengthening country ownership, upholding commitments, and promoting a partnership approach to achieve development results.

II. The Global Partnership’s Revised Support Needs

As set out in the concept note of the Joint OECD/UNDP Support Team “Arrangements for Joint OECD-UNDP Support to the Global Partnership for Effective Development Co-operation”<sup>1</sup>, the OECD and UNDP identified broad areas for support. The two organisations continue to refine their strategy and package of support for the Global Partnership as the work led by its Steering Committee evolves. In this regard, the outcomes of the first High-Level Meeting of the Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation, and the broad consensus among members of the Global Partnership on further actions to enhance its functions as well as the experience from the support provided by the team thus far are used to guide the work of the OECD-UNDP Joint Support Team for the next two years. The two organisations could be expected to deliver the following key outputs over the period July 2014-December 2016:

- 1. Global Partnership monitoring framework refined, strengthened and implemented to support accountability. Both organizations have collaborated to develop a global methodology for monitoring the implementation of the Busan commitments and undertaken the first monitoring exercise in 2013. Building on lessons learned from the first exercise and within the agreed framework, the Joint Support Team will further refine the methodology and complete the pilot assessment of new indicators. In addition to the “Helpdesk” function to assist the next monitoring exercise in 2015/2016, in-country and advisory support will be provided to stakeholders in strengthening/embedding monitoring exercise within national accountability frameworks. The Joint Support Team will prepare a progress report on the implementation of Busan commitments ahead of the next High-Level Meeting of the Global Partnership and facilitate a comprehensive review of the monitoring arrangements.

<sup>1</sup> The original concept note “Arrangements for Joint OECD-UNDP Support to the Global Partnership for Effective Development Co-operation – Overview of support activities and remaining resources requirements for 2013-2014 (January 2013, available at: <http://effectivecooperation.org/about/> ” sets out the mandate of the Joint OECD-UNDP Support Team. The overview of funding requirements (July 2014 - December 2016) elaborates the revised outputs/activities in line with the vision for the GPEDC new cycle (2014-2016).

- 2. Evidence-based analytical work is produced and disseminated to inform political dialogue and mutual learning and support country-implementation efforts. For the Global Partnership to be a “go-to” platform to learn from practical and on-the-ground experience, there is a need to strengthen the evidence-base and analytical work on development cooperation drawing on concrete results in implementing the Busan principles. In many areas, members of the Global Partnership possess analytical expertise and are responsible for generating evidence. The OECD and UNDP would primarily bring together and synthesise existing evidence and good practices on relevant issues, commission additional relevant work in selected areas, including on emerging areas relevant within the post-2015 agenda, and prepare policy briefs. In this regard, the Joint Support Team will further coordinate and collaborate with other initiatives to identify and collect complementary evidence on Busan implementation. Furthermore, in strengthening the potential for the Global Partnership to provide a platform for mutual learning and solution-oriented space to advance implementation of the Busan commitments/shared principles, the Joint Support Team will collaborate and support consultations/knowledge sharing led by relevant regional platforms and thematic initiatives as well as enhancing the virtual platform of the Global Partnership (www.unteamworks.org/gpedc). This will also include support to the organization of the annual workshop hosted by the Republic of Korea. Demand-driven advisory and technical support can also be provided to stakeholders in complementing their country-led efforts to strengthen country implementation frameworks and action plans and demonstrate results in implementing Busan principles. This would mainly involve backstopping from advisors located in UNDP regional centres<sup>2</sup> and support to selected country-led initiatives on a pilot basis.
- 3. Events and communication initiatives to support political efforts and outreach aiming at strengthening linkages with post-2015 and other global processes. The successful communication strategy in the lead up to the Mexico HLM underscores how effective communication and outreach can play a critical role in ensuring stakeholder engagement in the Global Partnership. In particular, the Global Partnership can greatly benefit from stronger support for: its existing communications channels and platforms; its outreach activities – such as side events; and coordination between the joint support team and individual Global Partnership members’ communications efforts. This three-pronged approach can contribute to providing inputs in the on-going post-2015 process and other relevant intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder processes.
- 4. Secretariat and advisory services to the Steering Committee and co-chairs. The OECD and UNDP continue to provide secretariat support to the Steering Committee. Such support includes on-going secretariat services (substantive preparation for meetings and operational support) and strategic advice to the co-chairs and committee members in support of their political leadership and broader outreach and relation management within the Global Partnership, including with various stakeholder groups and initiatives. Operational support also involves a degree of logistical support to some developing country members (facilitating outreach and engagement; funding travel costs).
- 5. High-level meeting of the Global Partnership organized. Both organisations played an important role in helping to organise the First High-Level Meeting of the Global Partnership and are likely to be requested to play an instrumental role in supporting the organisation of the high-level meeting of the Global Partnership in 2016 (host and date to be further confirmed). In addition to generating analysis and to gather evidence (as outlined above) to inform the meeting, the two organisations are expected to lead on a range of substantive, strategic and logistical activities (in close collaboration with the host country or organisation), including contribution to the organisation of side-events and outreach activities as well as facilitation of travel for participants from developing countries.

<sup>2</sup> Most resources in supporting country efforts are provided through UNDP country programmes, while the global and regional demand-driven catalytic support functions complement and strengthen country-level support activities.

III. RESOURCE REQUIREMENTS

The continuous engagement of the international community to sustain political momentum on effective development co-operation through the Global Partnership will require a functional and adequately resourced Joint Support Team. The Joint Support Team has faced significant shortfall in meeting its resource requirements to deliver an ambitious programme as envisaged in the original work programme (an activity overview for January 2013-July 2014 is annexed to this document). The work programme for the next two years calls for significantly more resources for the Joint Support Team to strengthen its support to monitoring, analytical work that will enhance country-level implementation and learning as well as communication. The significant increase includes the costs of communication related activities which were previously not funded out of the Joint Support Team's budget. Front-loading financial contributions will be of significant importance to enable the effective functioning of the Joint Support Team and help the Global Partnership to build up on the momentum from the Mexico High-Level Meeting.

Overview of costs

The estimated cost to both organisations for supporting the Global Partnership is USD 12.8 million for the two and a half year period July 2014-December 2016. This is equivalent to approximately USD 5.1 million per year. Over the course of the two and a half-year period 2014-16, the cost of OECD-executed activities is estimated at USD 5.4 million, while the cost of the activities executed by UNDP is estimated at USD 7.4 million.

An estimate of the cost of achieving each output identified in Section II of this document is provided in Table 3.

Resources for OECD-executed activities are channelled through the DAC's Programme of Work and Budget, while UNDP-executed activities should be financed through cost-sharing contribution agreements (voluntary contributions) with interested partners.

Remaining funding requirements and priority actions

OECD-DAC members have confirmed support for the OECD-executed activities costed above through the OECD's budgeting process. In doing so, they noted the need for both sides of the joint team to be fully financed to enable full implementation and leverage fully the synergies presented by this collaboration.

UNDP has a contribution carry over from the previous cycle of its support to the Global Partnership, totalling approximately USD 2.2 million. This amount has been allocated to the activities above for the period July 2014-December 2016, leaving the organisation with a funding gap of USD 5.1 million (or 70% of its 2014-2016 budget).
